Kennedy is half a fighter and half a business man. True, he prefers the sighting reputation, and he has some remote ambitions in the title line. But he has some of the drawbacks of having been at least partly civilized. He has been brought up to the idea of three meals a day and the millionaire menu. If he wanted ple for breakfast at any

With Palzer things were of a differ out bue. Instead of ple for breakfast he was lucky if he could find the reguation sawdust breakfast food. There are traditions to the effect that Palzer care workel for a living. No such blot darkons the escutcheon of Kennedy, whose father has money. Kennedy over did any real work. He may nave buffed a little, but nothing more than hat. Pounding a piano has been the rectest extreme of manual effort that an be traced to Kennedy since the whiting game began to look good.

THE difference between Kennedy and Palser is moral as well as physical. Palser has only one in his head. It may be a fact, as some critical persons have said, that he hasn't room for more than one idea at a time under his dome of thought, but that one idea is the fighting idea.
